When Rabbi Carl Rubin's wife is found strangled, the shockwaves reverberate far beyond tiny Summit County. Carl Rubin, a spiritual advisor with deep ties to the Israeli political scene enlists the legal help of Joshua Ryan who has suffered his own history of alcohol abuse and a train-wreck of a legal career.

For Ryan, this case would provide redemption - his own and the rabbi's. From Summit County to the twisting streets of Jerusalem's Mea Shearim, the rabbi is chased by his own lawyers; just ahead of the clutches of Summit County's malevolent prosecutor's roughriding detectives. In a shocking forensic turnaround, the trial of the rabbi concludes in a blaze of courtroom reality.

Rating:

"God Knows No Heroes" is not the type of book I would normally read. Â Â Having tried to read Grisham and other courtroom dramas, I'm usually left cold. Â Â Mr. Shabel's book though, kept me voraciously reading. Â Â I'm impressed with his assortment of characters and locations, intricate subplots, and believable, insightful legal hijinx. Â Â I became that much more fascinated upon finding this fiction story has it's roots in an actual court case against Rabbi Neulander of New Jersey.
